

We believe in 'collective military competency': Indian Navy Chief Admiral Karambir Singh

ANI | 18 OCT 2019, 04:11 PM IST

Post a Comment

Most Viewed Videos

Buy or Sell: Stock ideas by experts for October 18, 2019

Stocks in news: Cipla, KPR Mill, NMDC etc

Autocar Show: Maruti Suzuki S-Presso first drive review

RIL becomes first Indian company to hit Rs 9 lakh crore in market cap

Buy or Sell: Stock ideas by experts for October 17, 2019

Merger process will not go ahead with LVB post RBI rejection: Ajit Kumar Mittal, Indiabulls Group

Buy or Sell: Stock ideas by experts for October 16, 2019

Working with VTB to restructure debt after next tranche: ZEE MD Punit Goenka

Sensex drops 70 points, Nifty tests 11,550; Hero MotoCorp gains 3%

Chief of Naval Staff Admiral Karambir Singh along with Army Chief General Bipin Rawat attended the launch of 'Indigenous Defence Equipment Exporters Association' at Constitution Club of India in Delhi on October 18. While addressing the event, Admiral Karambir Singh focused on 'collective military competency' and said, "We want to learn from others. There is something called 'collective military competency' and this is what Indian Navy and India believes in. It is not necessary that one nation has all the capacity or competency. We've to learn from each other. We need to learn to work together. We have got Bangladesh and Indonesia who know a lot about 'HADR', for instance. Seychelles and Mauritius are making efforts towards marine ecology and conversation. Myanmar is good example of indigenous ship building. So, we look at collective military competency."

451 views

For the latest videos, follow us on twitter Follow @EconomicTimes